The Chauffeur's Troubles.

The latest disciples of the gospel of the chauffeur are professional chauffeurs. They teach and preach for me if I want to keep my job. "Said one driver. 'Clock models and bullet canons are not more careful of their figures than we fellows will have to be if the owners of automobiles keep on getting squeamish about their tires. We've got to be tightwads, every one of us. Time was when the man who wanted a chauffeur hired the chap who knew best how to manage a machine, no matter how much he weighed, but lately somebody has been figuring out that his extra 50 pounds or so is a terrible weight and wear on the automobile. That has scared the owner. There's no use, he argues, in adding to an automobile's unavoidable hardships those that are avoidable, consequently only chauffeurs who are regular slyphs stand much of a show.'

One Worthless Without the Other.
